Helen Keller was born in the southern United States. When she was only 19 months old, a severe illness left her deaf and blind. It was extremely difficult for Helen and her family to communicate. As Helen could not hear anyone’s voice to copy, she had not learned to speak. It was impossible to educate her until a young teacher called Annie Sullivan arrived. One of Annie’s strengths, as she described it herself, was that she had been blind, and eventually she managed to “reach” Helen and was able to teach her.

Helen Keller graduated from college with honours, and later visited many countries, speaking about winning through, despite difficulties and physical handicaps. She died on this day in 1968.

Helen Keller said:
“Most of us take life for granted. Only the deaf appreciate hearing; only the blind realise the manifold blessings that lie in sight. It is the same old story of not being grateful for what we have until we lose it; of not being conscious of health until we are ill.
But I, who am blind, can give one hint to those who see: use your eyes as if tomorrow you would be stricken.

And the same method can be applied to the other senses: hear the music of voices - the song of the bird, the mighty strains of an orchestra - as if you would be stricken deaf tomorrow.

Touch each object you want to touch as if tomorrow your tactile sense would fail. Smell the perfume of flowers.

taste with relish each morsel, as if tomorrow you would never smell and taste again.

Make every sense glory in the pleasure and beauty which the world reveals. Thus, at last, you will really see, and a new world of beauty will open up before you.

Let us pray:
Lord our God, open us up to your Spirit living within us, that we may live fully each day of our lives. Touch us, that we may become more aware of all that is around us, growing in a sense of wonder and awe, and in appreciation for all that we see and hear and touch, taste and smell. May we live in such a way that we never take anything for granted, but always be appreciative and express our thanks to those who are part of our lives.

Amen.
